Digital literacy lessons at Sacred Heart School

SABA--Pupils and teachers at Sacred Heart School (SHS) on Saba were impressed by the digital literacy lessons given by Mediawegwijs last week. They had a chance to explore technology, experience virtual reality and experiment with three-dimensional (3D) pens.

The lessons were a sneak preview of modern-day learning, using technology and multimedia to help children enhance their critical-thinking, problem-solving, team-working and creativity skills. Also, topics such as cyber-bullying, recognising fake news and game addiction were addressed in class and during special parent meetings.

When a pupil was asked what he liked most about the lessons, he said, "We get to keep the VR [virtual reality - Ed.] glasses and the robot."

Digital literacy lessons teach children how to use the digital world to their advantage and to be cautious navigating it. Via highly interactive activities the SHS pupils were introduced to computer coding and engineering, robotics and animation.

The lessons were set up in a way that the pupils can practise reading, writing and mathematics at the same time.

"A very interesting way of learning that speaks to children because it is so dynamic and entertaining," commented one of the teachers after her pupil had shown her a word he wrote - in the air - with a 3D pen.

The Internet is a world of opportunities and a place for creativity that can easily be accessed by anyone. It can also be unpredictable, deceiving and hold a lot of misinformation. The teachers from Mediawegwijs spoke about these topics with the SHS teachers so they can continue to discuss them with their pupils.

For digital literacy education to be successful, parents and caretakers were also involved in the programme. Parents on Saba were very interested in talking about the possible online dangers, such as cyber-bullying and game addiction. "I want my children to be aware of the possible dangers online, like cat-fishing and identity theft. I myself also want to learn how to avoid this," said a parent.

Mediawegwijs is currently offering its digital literacy lessons in schools in the Caribbean Netherlands. After successful programmes in St. Eustatius and Saba, it will be in Bonaire from May 2. The next trip is already being planned for November.
